

Karen Hasty, Ph.D. Susan N. Ishikawa, M.D. James D. Lackie Joseph Orgill III David R. Richardson, M.D. W. Reid Sanders Jeffrey R. Sawyer, M.D. Rita T. Sparks Robert E. Tooms, M.D. Joseph C. Weller

and her many other roles with great zest.

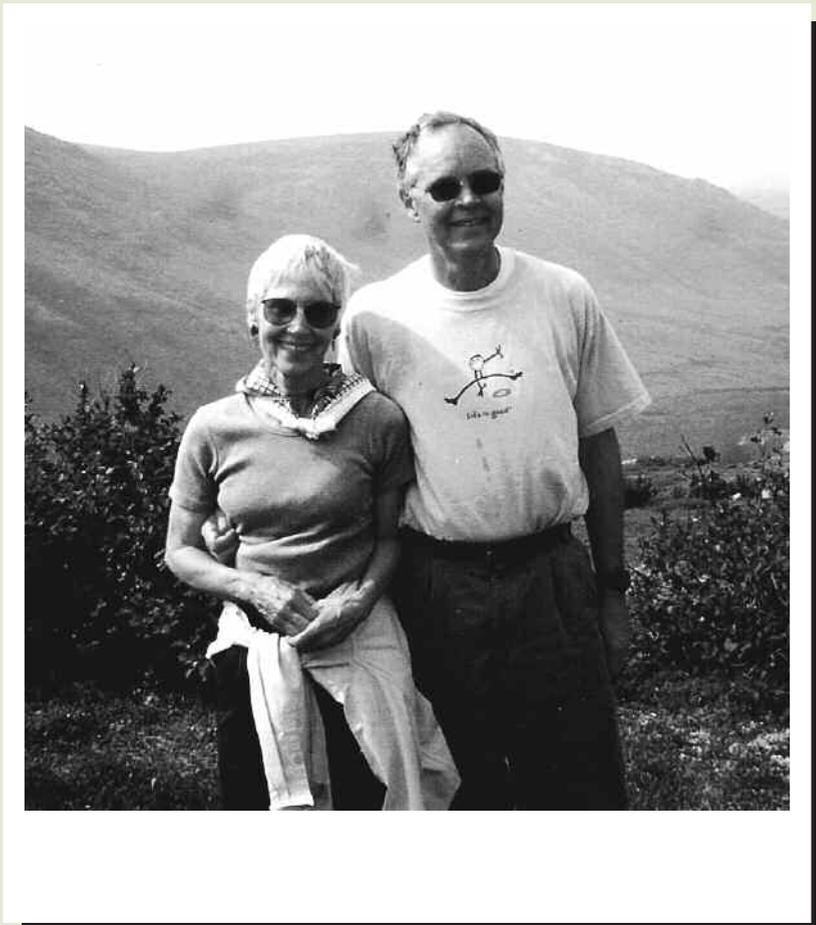

Still, she said “Yes” to The Campbell Foundation and has served its Board with energy and dedication.

“Campbell Clinic has set a standard of excellence for medical care in our community and throughout the region that is impressive, and the training that Campbell residents receive continues to be exceptional,” Hussey said. “Also, Campbell Clinic staffs The Med, the area’s only level-one trauma center. As a Memphis resident, I greatly appreciate the many ways that Campbell physicians serve our community.”

Hussey’s father had a heart attack when she was 18. His subsequent commitment to a strict diet and exercise shaped her lifelong commitment to healthy habits. She was a runner for years, “even before the movie Rocky made running popular,” she jokes.

Today she and her husband, psychiatrist Dr. Hal Brunt, walk three miles outdoors, ride bikes, or walk on a treadmill every day. They enjoy taking hiking trips in the U.S. and abroad. And, they love to dance. One of their goals for 2009 is to learn to salsa.

“Arthritis is a common word in our household,” Hussey said, “so the ongoing orthopaedic research and education focus of The Campbell Foundation is extremely important to us. We want to be active as long as we can be. The fact that The Campbell Foundation works to help make Campbell Clinic one of the nation’s premier musculoskeletal institutions is a goal we strongly support.”

Hussey said that in her own life, she has always set excellence as her goal and then worked toward that high bar, sometimes falling short but always stretching to achieve her best.

“Campbell Clinic inspires me with its commitment to excellence and what it has accomplished through the years,” she said. “Striving for excellence is challenging, but it makes life a lot more interesting.”

Campbell Foundation Trustee Buzzy Hussey and her husband, Dr. Hal Brunt, hiking a trail in Alaska.