Dr. David R. Richardson has been named Director of Education for the University of Tennessee-Campbell Clinic Department of Orthopaedics. He will oversee the residency and fellowship programs. Dr. Richardson joined the staff in 2005 after serving his residency with Campbell Clinic and completing a Foot and Ankle Fellowship with O.L. Miller Foot and Ankle Institute at Carolinas Medial Center. He succeeds Dr. Frederick Azar, who served as Director of Education for ten years.

The Campbell Foundation's commitment to educate the world's finest orthopaedic surgeons is a longstanding tradition. Dr. Willis Campbell established the orthopaedic residency program at the University of Tennessee School of Medicine in Memphis in 1924. The residency and fellowship programs have trained over 450 physicians practicing in the United States, Canada, South America, and Europe.

The residency program is an accredited five-year program for 40 residents, designed to provide each resident with a well-balanced foundation in academic and theoretical learning and practical clinical experience. Campbell Clinic offers a 12-month fellowship for talented physicians in the areas of foot and ankle surgery, sports medicine, pediatric orthopaedics, spine surgery, adult reconstruction, and trauma surgery.

Dr. David Richardson

“The University of Tennessee-Campbell Clinic has been one of the nation’s premier orthopaedic residency programs for many decades. I am dedicated to continuing this tradition of excellence and am grateful for this opportunity.”

— David Richardson, M.D.
